14 Addressing the Unmet Need of Sexual Health in Oncology Patients

Female sexual dysfunction in oncology patients is a prevalent and well-studied adverse effect of cancer treatment. For providers, lack of training, time constraints, and bias can be barriers to addressing female sexual dysfunction. Read how implementation of a sexual health clinic at UPMC Magee Cancer Center helped to break down these barriers and improve patient care.

Healthcare with Community in Its DNA

At the intersection of clinical care and social services resides the Community Health Worker Institute at Montefiore Health System. The Institute's team of 24 boots-on-the-ground community health workers look and sound like the patients they support because they have been recruited directly from the communities they serve. Learn how a carefully designed, cost-effective, value-based model of recruitment, training, deployment, and continuous professional development has allowed the Institute to mobilize a workforce of local community experts that has the potential to change the way health care systems nationwide approach social drivers of health and health equity.
