Prescription for Your Health

The Association of Community Cancer Centers

Since 1974, the Association of Community Cancer Centers (ACCC) has effectively represented the entire multidisciplinary cancer care team...providing a national forum for addressing issues that affect the future of cancer care programs, including third-party reimbursement, service line management, clinical research, and quality care measurements.

ACCC members are people like you: physicians, administrators, nurses, medical directors—everyone involved with the policy, management, and financing issues of cancer care. ACCC institutional members include close to 500 medical centers, hospitals, and cancer clinics across the nation. ACCC general members include, among others, more than 300 medical and radiation oncologists in private practice. Another 700 oncology care givers are members through their state oncology society's Chapter membership.

Why Join ACCC?

To receive key data

Cancer DRGs, Community Cancer Programs in the United States, Oncology Issues, and The Compendia-Based Drug Bulletin

To improve your quality of care

ACCC is in the forefront of the development of clinical indicators and guidelines to evaluate the processes of cancer care and patient outcomes.

To network with cancer care experts

ACCC's annual national conferences and regional meetings provide the tools and information to stay competitive.

To expand your research base

ACCC's Collaborative Research Group provides members with access to private research funding for innovative cancer treatment trials.
